Spells Pat Reble

A spell begins with a thought – a wish, or a prayer for something that is not already in existence. It is an intention or a desire to make that wish manifest, to bring it into reality, through an act of will.

Human beings have used spells since the dawn of recorded time. The paintings of animals on the walls of prehistoric caves are believed to be the first spells. By painting the images of their quarry on the rock face, our ancestors believed that they gained control over the spirits of the animals, and thus assisted the hunt.

We may laugh at such beliefs, but anthropologists who have spent time amongst the hunting cultures of so called “primitive” tribes have been frequently amazed by the accuracy with which the shamans or magicians of the tribe have directed the hunters towards animals very distant from themselves. Such shaman have often directed the hunters to set their snares in such a way that the animals appear to be driven towards them by inexplicable means.

We are told in The Bible: “Ask and it shall be given you.” (Matthew 7:7) This is a promise that prayers are answered. And the advocates of “Mind Power” all agree that by focussing our energies towards achieving specific goals we will meet with success.

What we are doing when we cast a spell is directing all our energies towards making our wish a reality, and directing the natural energies of the Universe towards helping us to achieve our desire. We are focussing or concentrating all our powers towards a particular outcome.

A spell has three aspects – preparation, performance and follow up. Each is discussed separately.
