MONUMENTS AND MARKERS OF THE 29 STATES ENGAGED AT CHICKAMAUGA & CHATTAHOOGA Jack Kerr

Chickamauga was by far the bloodiest battle west of the Appalachian Mountains. Of the 124,000 men engaged, 30% were listed as casualties. The number killed, wounded or reported missing in action exceeded 37,000. The scope of the tragedy is difficult to comprehend. Confederate dead were buried in mass graves on the battlefield, but were later moved. Many of the Union dead lay on the ground for three months until union troops recaptured the area and removed the bodies to what would later become the National Cemetery in Chattanooga. Through dialog and pictures of their monuments and markers, this book tells some of the stories of the regiments and slain soldiers, including eight brigade commanders. The author had two great-grandfathers at the battle.
